Global value chains (GVCs) have been exposed to an acceleration and cumulation of shocks over the last decade, from the 2008 financial crisis to the more recent COVID19 crisis, which have increasingly exposed the economic, social and environmental vulnerabilities of this form of production and development. By pulling together contributions from academics and activists who have engaged with these GVC challenges over the years, this book combines analytical perspectives and civil society strategies to promote sustainable change in GVCs.
