4. List of possible participants (not required):

Any individuals, groups, departments, centers, or allied institutions that actively support this proposal should be noted here.

5. *Please indicate which extant SASE network(s) (Networks - SASE) are thematically closest to your proposed mini-conference. Proposals that would otherwise fit within a network may include an explanation here as to why the topic should be discussed in a mini-conference format.

One of our goals in welcoming mini-conferences is to bring to the fore issues that are not covered by existing networks, but sometimes collaborations with existing networks, especially when it comes to scheduling, can be helpful. This is why we ask for this information, even if your mini-conference has a theme not covered by existing networks.

6. *Proposed mini-conference topic description:

Please append a 1-2 page description of the proposed topic for your mini-conference. Please include information on how your proposal is linked to the theme of this year's conference ("For Dignified and Sustainable Economic Lives: Disrupting the Emotions, Politics, and Technologies of Neoliberalism", full text here), and/or how it brings new or underrepresented topics to the conference. Note that special consideration will be given to proposals that cover areas currently underrepresented in SASE, notably race and ethnicity, migration, economic history, and heterodox economics – as well as submissions that provide a global perspective.

Please take note of SASE’s diversity statement:

SASE is committed to providing a safe and welcoming environment for all members and event participants, irrespective of, for example, race, color, ethnicity, ancestry, national origin, language, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, marital status, religion, disability, veteran status, or socio-economic status. Our association exists for the purposes of scholarly, educational, and professional exchange; much of the richness and vitality of this exchange is owed to SASE’s diverse membership and spirit of inclusiveness. We provide inclusionary events such as the Women and Gender (WAG) Forum, conference fees are based on socio-economic status, we are dedicated to a Code of Conduct, and we consider diversity in committees and convener teams. Discrimination and harassment of colleagues, students, or other participants in SASE events undermines shared principles of equity, free inquiry, and free expression – and is considered by SASE to be a serious form of professional misconduct.
